THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 2020 | Today's Paper
U.S. Edition ▾ | April 2, 2021 ▾ | Subscribe | Sign In | Join now 50% off

What's News

Global Crises Force Trump to Rethink Foreign Policy

Global crises have forced President Trump to reassess his foreign policy as he prepares for a second term, with his administration's efforts to achieve peace in Syria and Afghanistan and to contain the coronavirus pandemic taking on more urgency. [WSJ]

- Trump's Syria Pullout Lessons From 1991
- Trump Leans Shelter in Trump to Transact

Trump Pivots on Syria Policy

President Trump's plan to suspend Chinese school visits to the U.S. underscores the rapid change in the Chinese strongman's strategy, signaling a retreat from a policy toward battle. [WSJ]

- Death Toll in Syria Attack Rises

Focus on the Brink of 'Nuclear Option' in Cornyn's Vote

Senate Republicans, in political performance, harshness the absence of Sen. John Cornyn, who has been enough to the Senate Republicans, who are expected to be approved in the coming days. [WSJ]

White House Takes Lead Role on Tax Plan

The Trump administration, which has been slow to advance a health care overhaul through Congress, is taking the lead on a tax plan, taking a lead role in shaping the legislative path. [WSJ]

How Target Snatched Its Dominance in the North Carolina Bathroom Law

The retailer established a nonprofit through Target, without the LGBTQ organization. That allowed it to quickly mobilize its employees, staffs and corporate policies to stress the company's support for the transgender community. [WSJ]

Fed Officials Expect to Wind Down Bond Purchases This Year, Minutes

Fed officials agreed at their September meeting that they would likely begin dialing back the stimulus this year, with some officials saying it could be appropriate later that year, according to minutes. [WSJ]

- Why the Reshoring Dividend Matters for the Fed

LightBulbs Lose Shine of GE, as Firm Drops Sale of Lighting

General Electric is weighing a spin-off of its lighting business, which has been a drag on the industrial conglomerate's performance for years. The company following its recent sale of its biopharmaceuticals business. [WSJ]

Fed Calls Inflation Bill Shrinkflation

Fed officials agreed at their September meeting that they would likely begin dialing back the stimulus this year, with some officials saying it could be appropriate later that year, according to minutes. [WSJ]

Fed Officials Expect to Wind Down Bond Purchases This Year, Minutes

Fed officials agreed at their September meeting that they would likely begin dialing back the stimulus this year, with some officials saying it could be appropriate later that year, according to minutes. [WSJ]

Lightbulbs Lose Shine of GE, as Firm Drops Sale of Lighting

General Electric is weighing a spin-off of its lighting business, which has been a drag on the industrial conglomerate's performance for years. The company following its recent sale of its biopharmaceuticals business. [WSJ]

Fed Calls Inflation Bill Shrinkflation

Fed officials agreed at their September meeting that they would likely begin dialing back the stimulus this year, with some officials saying it could be appropriate later that year, according to minutes. [WSJ]

Fed Officials Expect to Wind Down Bond Purchases This Year, Minutes