French voters face a choice that mirrors the West's new divide

Final polling before today's presidential vote showed independent centrist Emmanuel Macron with a 25-point lead. But a loss for far-right challenger Marine Le Pen won't vindicate the establishment.

Trump-McConnell alliance gets biggest test yet with health care

At stake is the long-term future of the health-care system and the near-term future of the GOP-controlled government. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, a political insider, and President Trump, the ultimate outsider, will need to balance each other to score a big legislative win.

Democrats' biggest foes for 2018 may be time and themselves

Democrats say Republicans will "pay a price" in the midterm elections for the health-care bill, but their internal divisions may stand in the way of a strong campaign.

Mohammed Fathi and other locals play pool at Captain, a popular club in Mosul, where billiards clubs have reopened. (Alex Potter for The Post)

'We seek joy': Rid of ISIS, Mosul residents return to smoke-filled billiard halls

With the militants now expelled from the city's east, more than a dozen pool halls have reopened as residents try to bring back a sense of normalcy to their lives. New clubs have also sprung up, betting that residents will indulge in some of the pleasures that were banned by the militants.

Sessions follows Obama playbook on prosecuting officers, but not on police reform

Where the Justice Department under the previous administration saw fatal shootings by police as a product of cultural problems in law enforcement, Attorney General Jeff Sessions is inclined to see them as the result of a few bad officers.

Pulitzer Prize-winning reporting: Uncovering Trump

In February 2016, presidential candidate Donald Trump promised $6 million in donations, including $1 million from his own pocket, to charities along his campaign trail. Months later, he had donated far less than he pledged. Post reporter David A. Fahrenthold went in search of the missing money and found a bigger story than he ever expected.
