Why Your Extra-Safe Car Costs More to Insure

High-tech collision-prevention systems on cars help prevent crashes. But enabling the safety tech are cameras, sensors, microprocessors and other hardware whose repair costs can be more than five times that of conventional parts. Insurance companies, unwilling to shoulder all the pain, are passing some of the cost off to buyers.

Veg-O-Matic Maker Files to Go Public. But Wait, There's More...

Ronco Brands, which has passed through several owners since its founder Ron Popeil turned the infomercial into a kitschy art form, has launched an initial public offering that values the business at more than $110 million.
