Democracy Dies in Darkness

Amid immigration setbacks, one Trump strategy seems to be working: Fear

The number of migrants crossing into the United States has dropped markedly since he took office, and experts on both sides of the debate attribute at least part of this shift to the administration's use of sharp, unwelcoming rhetoric, enforcement raids and public spotlighting of crimes committed by immigrants.

Trump guarantees protection for those with preexisting medical conditions — but it's unclear how

Appearing on "Face the Nation," the president said "I mandate" protections for such patients be included in the latest proposal to replace the Affordable Care Act, but he struggled to fully articulate what form those protections would take.

Administration weighing how to make it easier to sue the media, Priebus says

As one of the most visible public officials in the world, it would be extremely difficult for President Trump to prove that journalists had met the judicial standard of actual malice in their critiques of him.

After a tight loss in Kansas, what's a Democrat to do? Take on Koch and Trump, one garage sale at a time.

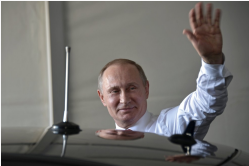

Although they lost the election to take Mike Pompeo's seat in Congress, Democrats were invigorated to see that Sedgwick County, home of Republican mega-donor Charles Koch, voted for their candidate for the first time in decades. Now they're working to build on that momentum.

How the Republican right found allies in Russia

From gun rights to terrorism to same-sex marriage, many leading advocates on the right who grew frustrated with their country's leftward tilt under President Barack Obama have forged ties with well-connected Russians and come to see that country's authoritarian leader, Vladimir Putin, as a potential ally.

The night Trump failed to break the White House correspondents' dinner

This year's media-political fête was like an off-year high school reunion, with a smaller crowd and fewer crazy stories. But there was no shortage of hors d'oeuvres and dancing and gossip.

After a lost court battle, New Orleans protesters launch last-ditch effort to protect Confederate monuments

After one monument was disassembled, about a dozen people have stood vigil at three monuments honoring the Confederacy — landmarks that officials say are out of touch with how most residents feel and should be removed.

Schools nationwide are pressed to act on an unseen danger: Lead in the water

Parents are pushing for action, but districts are challenged by aging buildings, strained budgets and a regulatory vacuum that seldom mandates testing. Health officials agree that no amount of lead exposure is safe. Even small amounts risk irreversible cognitive and developmental damage, particularly in young children.

The melting Arctic threatens a traditional lifestyle of living off the water

Climate change has upended the culture and economy of the Inuguit, hunters who arrived in Greenland's northernmost village in 1953. Encroaching problems include mercury polluting their food supply and increased isolation for a people used to traveling atop the ice.
