

Slowdown in first quarter gives Trump a reality check on the economy

The first official growth estimates of Donald Trump's presidency underscored the challenge the White House faces in reaching its target of 3 percent growth, an expansion that Trump not only promised on the campaign but is counting on to fuel his broader economic agenda.

Trump's abrupt shifts on trade throws allies off balance

Canadian and Mexican officials were blindsided by the president's announcement on NAFTA. By late Wednesday, the crisis had been averted, and all that was left of the plan to withdraw from the agreement was a mood of triumphalism at the White House, and a renewed wave of unease and indignation across America's neighbors.

North Korea fires another ballistic missile amid international tensions

The missile appears to have exploded in flight, U.S. and South Korean defense officials said, but it underscores Kim Jong Un's determination to make technical progress on his weapons programs and his defiance amid international pressure.

'Peak TV' paradox: Why so much great TV has become bad news for writers

Many Hollywood writers are experiencing an unexpected side effect of what has become a flood of ambitious television: a steep pay cut. The median pay for television writers has declined 23 percent in three years, according to one of the unions representing 12,000 writers that plan to go on strike as early as midnight Monday if a new contract is not reached.

Half of immigrants arrested in Feb. raids had traffic convictions or no record, data shows

Records provided by congressional aides offer the most detailed look yet at the backgrounds of the individuals rounded up and targeted for deportation by Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents in a series of raids days after President Trump took office.

A charter flight left the U.S. carrying 8 Iraqis. A community wonders who will be next.

The deportations quietly signaled a major shift in U.S. policy. Chaldean Catholics living in Michigan worry they'll be forced to return to a country they don't know, and some believe they will be persecuted there.

Pulitzer Prize-winning reporting: Uncovering Trump

In February 2016, presidential candidate Donald Trump promised $6 million in donations, including $1 million from his own pocket, to charities along his campaign trail. Months later, he had donated far less than he pledged. Post reporter David A. Fahrenthold went in search of the missing money and found a bigger story than he ever expected.
