Tyshaun McPhatter, 8, in the bedroom he shared with his father, Andrew McPhatter, who was shot March 5.

For this 2nd-grader, gunfire, school lockdowns, then the worst violence of all

For kids in Tyshaun McPhatter's Southeast Washington neighborhood — and millions of others in high-crime communities across the country — the threat of violence shapes almost every aspect of their lives: The streets they walk, the pictures they draw, the nightmares they have and the number of parents they come home to.

Conservative pundit Ann Coulter vows to hold Berkeley event despite university cancellation

Coulter said she would call the university's "bluff" by agreeing to rules set by the university seeking to prevent violence. The university decided to cancel her appearance next week after assessing the violence that flared on campus in February when the same college Republican group invited right-wing provocateur and former Breitbart editor Milo Yiannopoulos to speak.

'The Handmaid's Tale' isn't just timely, it's essential viewing for our fractured culture

Margaret Atwood's premise describes a situation that seems at first outlandish, yet its plausibility has a way of creeping up on the viewer, showing how the smallest freedoms are the first to disappear, followed by a radical reordering of one's world.

Pulitzer Prize-winning reporting: Uncovering Trump

In February 2016, presidential candidate Donald Trump promised $6 million in donations, including $1 million from his own pocket, to charities along his campaign trail. But by the time he won the New Hampshire primary, he had stopped giving away money and had donated far less than his pledged amount. Post reporter David A. Fahrenthold went in search of the missing money and found a bigger story than he ever expected.
