House GOP narrowly passes bill to overhaul health-care system

With vote, Republicans claim fulfillment of a major campaign promise

- The GOP-backed American Health Care Act, which advanced with a vote of 217 to 213, still must be debated in the closely divided Senate, where formal debate isn't expected to begin until June.
- The vote marks an achievement for President Trump, who has pledged to repeal and replace Obamacare, but has struggled to secure legislative wins early in his presidency.

GOP follows the playbook it attacked in Obamacare debate

After seven years of insisting the Affordable Care Act was jammed through without scrutiny, House Republicans brushed off questions about whether they read the new bill or why they needed to vote before a cost estimate was ready.
