Analysis

These schools are the best in the nation at challenging students

The Washington Post crunched the data from high schools around the country: The number of advanced tests given divided by the number of students who graduated that year. How well did your student's school perform?

Campaign of French presidential candidate Emmanuel Macron says it has been hit by a 'massive' hack of emails and documents

The announcement came on the last official day of campaigning in France's contentious presidential election. The news immediately stoked fears of a targeted operation intended to destabilize the electoral process — especially after reports of alleged Russian hacking in the U.S. presidential election last November.

Health care will drive elections from state level to Capitol Hill

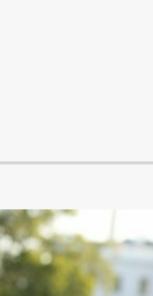

The issue probably will shape the next two voting cycles — including for gubernatorial candidates and state legislators, who will have to answer whether they intend to "opt out" of popular Affordable Care Act provisions. Just as Democrats were forced to defend Obamacare in the 2010 midterms — the result was a drubbing that Barack Obama called a "shellacking" — the GOP will be in the hot seat this time.

An ambitious Republican finds himself in the crossfire as political divides deepen

A few months ago, Sen. Tom Cotton of Arkansas was laying the groundwork for his own ambitions. He's a rising star and one of the president's staunchest supporters. But on health care, he has not marched in lockstep. He echoes Senate GOP leaders: "We're going to write our own bill."
