'I was all set to terminate': Inside Trump's sudden reversal on pulling out of NAFTA

In an Oval Office interview with The Post, President Trump said he had "looked forward" to announcing the U.S. withdrawal from the trade deal on the 100th day of his presidency. But his impulsive turnaround was the latest in a series of abrupt shifts in the frenzied lead-up to his 100th day.

The Daily 202 Analysis

This is how Trump looks out for the people who voted for him

It wasn't pleas from foreign leaders or CEOs that prompted the president to change his mind about NAFTA. It was a map of the United States that apparently proved decisive in the tug-of-war between the populists and the globalists inside the administration.

Alone in the White House, Trump is enjoying the perks of his new home

He enjoys leading guests on trivia-filled tours. He brags about the specialties of the White House chefs. But the fact that Trump entertained a dinner party, which included Ted Nugent and Sarah Palin, for four hours last week may indicate his hunger for company.
